ABSTRACT

This 43-minute videotape is part of the on-going Internet education series exploring the fascinating resources of the Internet. It was produced directly for those in society that did not have computers growing up. One exceptional point of the video is its simple approach. It demonstrates World Wide Web, e-mail and other Internet applications. Seniors will learn how to communicate with family and friends via e-mail; research investment opportunities; plan retirement; plan a vacation; research a family's genealogy; follow sports teams; find people with similar interests and hobbies; and more. Also included is a reference guide with a listing of many of the Internet sites seen in this videotape. (AA)
